The MD of an exclusive matchmaking service will be part of an all-female team on the Grand Tour.

This is a five-day drive from London to Monte Carlo, starting on July 22, and it's a chance for wealthy people to raise money for charity.

In the case of nine of the 29 teams involved, the charity is Bottletop, which funds sexual health education initiatives in the UK, Africa and Brazil. One of the nine consists of Susie Ambrose, Managing Director of 70:30 (the matchmaker for millionaires) and her colleague Rachel Maclynn, who will take part in the event using Susie's Mercedes-Benz SLK.

"I believe that fortunate people have a moral obligation to encourage, support and help young people who are less fortunate," says Susie (pictured). "I see them as an integral part of the world and its future.

"I was moved by Bottletop's objectives in educating young people about issues like HIV/AIDS and enabling them to make the right choices in life."

"We're fortunate to have 9 teams in total rallying for Bottletop this year," says the charity's Managing Director Jonathan Pattison. "If each one of them can raise a minimum of £5000, then this will give us £45,000 to help young people in Africa, UK and Brazil. I have a sneaking suspicion that Susie and Rachel are going to smash this target themselves!

"We'd like everyone to join in, so if you want to sponsor our wonderful women, please do."
