

Jo finds love with money

WITH £10 million in the bank after splitting from her husband of 27 years, the Countess of Bradford may have found the perfect way to fend off gold-diggers. She has discovered the exclusive Seventy Thirty dating agency in St James's, London, which only admits members who have at least £1 million.

'My friend was discussing how difficult it was to meet someone who is not just after your money, so I agreed to test out the agency for her,' says the trim Lady Bradford, 51, who finalised her divorce from the 7th Earl last year after their marriage collapsed in 2004.

'Membership costs a minimum of £10,000 a year and they inspect your house to make sure you are the right kind of person.'

But has the former Jo Miller (pictured), who has stepped out with multi-millionaire tycoon Graham Whateley since leaving Lord Bradford, found a wealthy Mr Right?

'It actually worked out rather well,' she tells me. 'As I was sitting in the agency waiting room, an American oil man who owned the company next door came in, chatted me up and asked me out. I never went back.'
