

Extract from 'Don't fall for this deadly honey trap'

by Tara Winter Wilson. Friday, 2 March 2007

According to Susie Ambrose, who runs a "gold-digger-vetting" business called Seventy Thirty, there are increasing amounts of women who are desperately materialistic and who have learnt the art of "faking love". They don't want to marry for emotional support, intimacy or companionship; they are driven by monetary rewards. And, dear readers, they walk among us.

So how can you spot a potential toxic wife? I feel it is my duty to provide you with a checklist (courtesy of Susie Ambrose). This is vital reading material for all you potential husbands. Pay close attention; this is professional advice from an expert and it could save you millions - not to mention your sanity. And, women, too, take note - for it could save love and marriage from becoming things of the past.

HOW TO SPOT A TOXIC WIFE

Women who are secure in themselves and have a more developed emotional intelligence and personal depth do not feel the need to show off. Check whether or not she is festooned with 'designer' accessories. Listen carefully to what she says. How often does she name-drop?

On first acquaintance, she will want to find out if you're rich or not. If you find yourself discussing your assets within the first 10 minutes you know her agenda. She is not going to waste time on you if you don't have serious money.

She will flirt without first finding out if you're married or involved with someone else. She has no scruples about stealing another woman's man.

Even though she may have an impressive job, her main asset is sex. She will come on in a highly provocative manner, be wearing lots of make-up and revealing clothes. Potential toxic wives are extremely clever. Do not equate intelligence with emotional values and worth.

Often she will use the FSFM tactic (feel sorry for me). This will manifest itself on the second or third date. She wants to assess how generous you can be and will tell you how "naïve" she is and how "misled" by some nasty people she owes money to. As a chivalrous male, you get out your chequebook.

You must find out how motivated she is. Ask her what her future goals, dreams and aspirations are.

Toxic gold-diggers tend to target older men. And your level of physical attractiveness makes no difference. Do you genuinely wildly arouse her or is this all an act?

She will choose the most expensive item on the menu or the most expensive drink. Men, who have been recently widowed or divorced are great prey. You are at your most vulnerable.

Before you marry, go on holiday together or spend at least some time co-habiting.
